#	Question	Yes	No	Comments
1	The assessment findings are consistent with the decision made about which evidence-based practices to use
2	There appears to be a good match between the practice and the consumer's choice/ world view/clinical priorities
3	There is evidence in the training and supervision records that the clinician has had sufficient training to use the practice effectively
4	There is evidence of ongoing clinical supervision or an alternative means of supervision specific to the practice and the supervisor has sufficient understanding of the practice to provide essential feedback
5	There is evidence in the agency's EBP and/or QA documentation that they have internal processes in place to measure fidelity or clinical outcomes
6	When a practice has been modified in a significant way, there is evidence the agency is working with the developer and measuring outcomes to assure that the modifications are sound and effective
7	When fidelity or outcomes concerns are identified, the agency has internal processes in place for responding to them.
8	The treatment plan/modality is being reviewed and adjusted according to the consumer's needs, progress and preferences.
